A correspondent of the Newark Advertiser, writing from Brescia, July 25th,

Thousands of these mutilated wretches are deformed for life. Pancy the hideous spectacle. More than 2,000 limbs have been amputated. Many have lost both legs; and there is one poor trunk, a fine, spirited young Frenchman, who has been deprived of all four limbs, that is both feet, one arm entire, and the hand of the other. And yet, alas' he lives, not certainly, as one of your English wits once said to the mourners over a fatal case of like mutilation, to be an ornament to

The hospital reports yesterday reduce the sick and wounded remaining to about 8,000, chiefly French and Padmontese. The mortality among the Austrians is sur-prising; only about 500 remain; they are well provided for in the Cathedral, one of the 40 improved hospitals, attended by their own surgeons, who were among the all nature is languishing, aggravates the suffering; but this humane people bring all their resources to miligate it.
